

Personality Strategies Defined

Strategies are four expressions of how your personality moves through the world, shaped by how you engage with others and how you respond when life gets hard.

What Are Strategies?

Strategies are a way of grouping the 16 personality types based on the four possible combinations of the two personality scales that bookend our personality framework: Introversion vs. Extraversion and Assertive vs. Turbulent.

Together, these shared traits combine to influence your social style and how you respond to stress.

Your social style – whether you're Introverted or Extraverted – captures how much other people factor into the way you pursue goals, make decisions, and move through daily life. Do you prefer working independently, or do you draw energy and ideas from those around you?

Your response to stress is influenced by whether you're Assertive or Turbulent. It captures how you evaluate yourself, handle pressure, and deal with setbacks. Are you generally steady and self-assured? Or do you have a sensitivity to falling short that fuels an inner drive for improvement?

Together, these two aspects of personality create four distinct Strategies:

Confident Individualism: Independent, emotionally grounded, and quietly self-assured

People Mastery: Socially confident, energized by others, and resilient under pressure

Constant Improvement: Deeply reflective, highly self-aware, and driven toward growth

Social Engagement: Enthusiastic, perceptive, and deeply invested in connection

Two people can share the same personality type yet operate from different Strategies. This explains why people who seem similar on the surface can experience the world in surprisingly different ways.

Confident Individualism Strategy

Shared Traits: Introverted (I) and Assertive (-A)

Confident Individualists are self-reliant and emotionally grounded, trusting their own judgment without needing outside validation. They approach life with a quiet inner steadiness that allows them to stay true to their values, even under social pressure. Their independence is a genuine strength – though it can occasionally become a blind spot when outside perspectives might serve them.

People Mastery Strategy

Shared Traits: Extraverted (E) and Assertive (-A)

People Masters are socially confident and emotionally resilient, thriving in dynamic, people-centered environments and drawing real energy from connection and collaboration with others. They take initiative, communicate directly, and recover quickly from setbacks. Their natural self-assurance drives decisive action, though it can sometimes make it harder for them to recognize when they may need to change course.

Constant Improvement Strategy

Shared Traits: Introverted (I) and Turbulent (-T)

Constant Improvers are reflective and deeply self-aware, driven by an ongoing desire to grow and refine their understanding of both themselves and the world in general. Their sensitivity allows them to perceive subtleties others often miss, and their high personal standards push them to pursue personal and professional growth. That same drive, however, can create persistent internal pressure and make it difficult for them to be content even when things are going well.

Social Engagement Strategy

Shared Traits: Extraverted (E) and Turbulent (-T)

Social Engagers bring enthusiasm and perceptive awareness to every interaction, combining a genuine love of connection with a keen attunement to what's happening beneath the surface. They invest deeply in their relationships and care strongly about how their contributions are received. This combination gives them real social depth – though it can also leave them vulnerable to overthinking and burnout when they take on more than they can sustain.

Understanding Your Strategy

Your Strategy operates constantly, often beneath your conscious awareness. It shapes how you show up in your relationships, how you handle pressure, and what motivates you to act. Without understanding these patterns, you might spend years wondering why certain situations are exciting while others feel draining – or why two people with the same personality type can seem so different.

Understanding your Strategy allows you to recognize your natural patterns so you can work with them instead of against them – and build a life that fits who you actually are.
